

A unique weekend by the sea

Oropesa del Mar (Castellón), June 2026. Rest, good food and wellbeing are the three ideas that sum up the weekend proposal of Bellver Blue Tech Zone. Conceived from start to finish within a single setting that brings together everything needed to experience the essence of the Costa de Azahar.

The plan begins at Hotel Masía Bellver. Its 64 rooms combine contemporary design with materials and tones that echo the Mediterranean: pale stone, wood and light that pours in unfiltered from first thing in the morning. Outside, the open-air pool invites you to take your time, and the gym makes it easy to stay true to the wellbeing spirit the place promotes.

From the hotel door, only a few steps separate rest from the next stop on the plan: Bosque. Here the morning starts with yoga on a wooden platform among the pines, with the Torre Colomera in the background. Mindful movement follows, with instructors who adapt every session so that everyone can enjoy it equally. For those who prefer a more active pace, there are cycling routes or a paddle surf crossing, all with the aim of feeling part of the surroundings.

With the body awake, the plan ends where this deeply rooted ecosystem began: at the Masía Bellver restaurant. A menu built on produce and season, served to be enjoyed with all five senses. Dining here, after a full day of rest and movement, closes the circle before heading back to the room.

What sets this proposal apart is not any single service, but the way they link together without ever leaving the same setting. And this is only one of the possible plans, because Bellver Blue Tech Zone brings together many more spaces, each with its own way of contributing to that same philosophy.
